

Architectural Style and Form: Italianate (1840-1885)

The Italianate style was among the dominant residential styles between the 1850s and 1880s, emerging in the 1830s as part of the picturesque movement, which drew inspiration from the romantic, informal and rambling Italian farmhouses and villas. In New York, the Italianate style proliferated throughout cities, towns and rural areas from the 1850s until the turn of the century. Sometimes referred to as the Bracketed style, perhaps the key distinguishing feature of the Italianate style is its decoratively cut often scrolled brackets, which were typically used in abundance to support door and window hoods and to embellish the prominent cornice. Other characteristics of the style include the use of tall narrow windows often segmentally or round arched bay windows and porches with elaborate detailing. While not as common among the surveyed properties in Williamsville, the Italianate style is present.

5409 Main Street

Built in 1877 by Phillip J. Snyder, this is a good example of an Italianate style house on Main Street. Notice the round headed windows which are characteristic of the style.

5757 Main Street

Built in 1851, this modest front-gable example features the round-arched windows that are typical of the style. It may have also once had bracketed eaves.

While not as common among the surveyed properties in Williamsville, the Italianate style is present. While there were no high-style Italianate examples surveyed for this project, there are a few examples of modest and vernacular Italianate style examples that were once residential buildings, and now commercial offices.

Description of Significance: The building at 5757 Main Street is significant as a good example of a modest Italianate style brick former residential building. It is a good example of the type of former residential buildings converted to commercial use that are located along Main Street in Williamsville. Built in 1851 by John Haskill, a wagon maker originally from Lancaster, Pennsylvania, the brick house remained a residence for over a century. In 1956 the building was converted to commercial functions. Around this time the building underwent alterations including the addition of a side porch and the relocation of the entrance. Today the building houses an architectural office.

Description of Property: 5757 Main Street is located on the south side of Main Street/Rt. 5 in the Village of Williamsville, located midblock between South Ellicott Street and Garrison Rd. The building at 5757 Main Street is a 1 ½-story front gable 3-rank brick former residential building in a modest Italianate style with a brick foundation and walls, and an asphalt shingle roof. Modified for commercial use, the building retained its characteristic round-arched windows and entry door on the front elevation; paired slender windows in gable. Side elevations of front historic building feature flat-headed windows with large stone lintels; multi-pane wood sash windows. Addition at west side now serves as primary entry; large concrete block rear addition, likely ca. 1950s. Northern portion of building retains 2/2 double hung wood sash windows and storms.
