

Architectural Style and Form: Craftsman/ Arts and Crafts (1905-1930)

The Craftsman style became the dominant style for smaller houses constructed throughout the country in the first decades of the twentieth-century. Developing as a response to the chaotic ornamentation of the Victorian-era which dominated the late nineteenth-century, the Craftsman movement emphasized the beauty of natural materials such as wood, stone and metals. The American Craftsman movement drew heavily on the ideals of the British Craftsman movement, founded by William Morris in the 1860s, who promulgated a return to hand-made and traditional production in response to the mechanization of the Industrial Revolution and the diminished role of worker as craftsman.

5511 Main Street

This mixed-use building features some modest Craftsman influence, notably the shingled oriel that projects from the east elevation.

5688 Main Street

This commercial building utilizes some Arts and Crafts influence with its use of brick and its "rustic" tile pent roof.

In architecture, the Craftsman style was influenced by several sources. It was initially utilized in the design of rustic cottages and resorts, imitating or inspired by vernacular architecture and log cabins. Other influences to the style came from the interest in exotic cultures during the late 1800s, such as Oriental and Indian art and architecture. Some influence from the roughly contemporary Prairie Style (which originated in the Chicago area) may also be seen in the style. By the early twentieth-century, the Craftsman style had been translated into affordable, smaller houses which generally were called bungalows. This new bungalow house became extremely popular, and proliferated throughout the country in residential neighborhoods in the early twentieth-century. Of those properties surveyed in the Village of Williamsville, there were relatively few examples of the Craftsman Bungalow style identified. The relative scarcity of these designs in the neighborhood, in favor of earlier trends such as Greek Revival and Italianate, indicates that the survey area was largely developed prior to the early twentieth-century when the Craftsman style was widely popular.
